Milk Receipts At Cheese Factory Are Holding Up Well

Dairy Committee of Local Chamber Starts On Intensive Drive

MORE MILK WANTED

Expect To Increase Daily Receipts To Capacity of Plant

The development of the dairy industry in Hempstead county continues to show satisfactory progress according to the dairy development committee of the Hope Chamber of Commerce. Now that other major projects on the chamber program have been completed and are out of the way, the committee expects to push the dairy development work as rapidly as possible during the next few months.

While the progress of Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation's plant in this city has received but little publicity during the past few months, the dairy receipts have held up unusually well and the dairy committee is very much encouraged over the prospects for the future of the plant. The plant is now receiving more than 5,000 pounds of milk daily and all indications point to an increase in these receipts during the next few months.

The dairy committee realizes that the development of the industry in a large measure upon improvement of the herds in the various communities and the addition of more and better cows to these herds. The committee has completed plans for placing a car load of purebred sires in the county and plans are underway for placing more good cows on the various milk routes.

With the beginning of tick eradication work in the county next spring, the work of improving the herds of the county will be made much easier.

The butter-fat market is beginning to show improvement and the farmers of this section are assured a ready cash market for all the milk they produce. As the volume of milk receipts increase, the overhead expenses of the local cheese plant will be reduced and the farmers will be benefited by a corresponding increase in the butter-fat market. As has been stated several times in these columns, the success of the cheese plant and the development of the dairy industry depends upon the cooperation of our entire citizenship.

Another Recess In Fall Trial Ordered

Case Will Likely Be Continued When Called Monday Morning

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11. (AP)—The trial of Albert B. Fall, charged with receiving a $100,000 bribe from E. L. Donhey, was recessed against by Justice William Hitz who announced he would decide later whether to declare a mistrial or recess the court until Monday.

Physicians appointed by the District of Columbia Supreme Court to examine Fall announced in their report to the court that to continue the trial would be a danger to Fall's life.

On the basis of this report defense counsel asked a recess "to give Fall a chance." Special government counsel, however, countered with a request that a mistrial be declared.

Physicians advised the court that Fall was suffering from an attack of bronchial pneumonia.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 11. (AP)—The arrival by airplane of "Count Pulaski," registered bull calf being brought from Pulaski, N. Y., to Little Rock has been delayed until tomorrow because of poor visibility at Indianapolis according to information received today.

Capt. Hugh Barclay, New York sportsman and breeder of Guernsey cattle, who had given the calf to the Pulaski county dairy movement, telegraphed chamber of commerce officials here today that because of poor flying weather they would be unable to leave Indianapolis until Saturday morning, arriving here in the afternoon.

Senator Blaise, of South Carolina, asked the senate inquiry.

Well It Was A Close Call for All of Them, Even If the Bull Was Securely Tied

MARSHFIELD, Wis., Oct. 11.—Three men plodded across pasture near here with a bright red canoe that was part of the equipment they planned to use on a fishing expedition.

The inverted canoe rested upon the heads of A. W. Follett and E. P. Schroeder while Jack Haws carried the remainder of the equipment. Suddenly from a nearby section of the pasture came the bellow of a horned bull.

Haws was the first to see the pawing, snorting animal and the first to reach a distant fence. Schroeder next responded to that bellowing alarm of the bull and he dextrously disengaged himself from the canoe and made for the same fence.

Follett, wild with excitement as he heard the outraged bawling of what he supposed was the oncoming bull, could not extricate himself from the interior of the canoe and in his efforts fell to the ground with the boat on top of him.

Thus the situation was when Haws and Schroeder had valued the fence and turned again toward the field.

The bull continued to paw the earth but he advanced no nearer the bright red canoe which protected a nervous fisherman.

Warily approaching the bull Haws found the animal was securely chained.

Subsequently, Mrs. McPherson's youthful husband was arrested on a grand jury indictment, the grand jury recommending the transfer to other duties of two police detectives who handled the affair.

More Convicts Under Suspicion

Officials Believe Ten Others Implicated In Recent Outbreak

CANON CITY, Col., Oct. 11. (AP)—With announcement yesterday that 10 more convicts, including Danny Daniels the title of "king" of the Colorado state prison here prior to the recent riot that took 13 lives, had been placed in solitary confinement, prison officials said they have discovered the existence of well organized gangs or cliques inside the penitentiary.

Most of the convicts locked up today are men who have given valuable evidence concerning causes of the riot, officials said, and they were placed in solitary confinement to safeguard them from possible attacks by other prisoners.

Warden P. E. Crawford said that today's action brought the total number of convicts held in solitary confinement to 12. Charles Davis and Leo McGenty were locked up shortly after the riot.

One of two major factions among the prisoners was led by Daniels, officials say, while another was led by Reardon.

The death yesterday of Myron Goodwin, a guard, who was wounded in the rebellion, who was wounded in the rebellion, brought the total number killed to 13, eight guards and five prisoners.

"Shoe-Stringing" On State Bonds

THIS writer stated some time ago that the success of the gasoline note plan in building highways had set Arkansas crazy on the subject of bonds.

With the recklessness of a current administration we are only mildly concerned. The people can always take care of today's ills so long as there is a remedy available tomorrow. It is when the future is pushed back further and further under a never-ending series of state bonds, that the commonwealth becomes truly alarmed.

Upon reading the petition for an injunction filed against the State Construction Commission last Tuesday at Little Rock we learn that the state is preparing through this agency to issue $3,250,000 in bonds to build a new state hospital.

No worrier cause could be imagined—but the worst case cause has no appeal unless well grounded financially.

It is reported in press dispatches from Little Rock that the guarantee behind these new state bonds will be the Charities Fund. But the Charities Fund has just received $500,000 from the first proceeds of the state income tax. What does this amount to but issuing bonds against the state income tax?

The Star isn't discussing the income tax. That is clear out of it. We have already pledged ourselves to the support of this new tax. But bonding the income tax is something else again.

We will put it this way: Granted that a majority of the voters of Arkansas believe the income tax is the best revenue measure today, how many of them are willing to gamble on it for ten, fifteen, twenty years?

If the State of Arkansas issues bonds against it, the tax becomes as fixed and permanent as a series of local paving bonds. The state's credit, its honor, its promise to pay, will have been extended—and that pledge will have to be redeemed whatever the cost.

The income tax bonds will probably be defended on the ground that they employ the same principle used in the floating of gasoline tax notes. That is wrong. There is a direct connection between the gasoline tax and good roads; people who ride on good roads help to pay for them—and the gasoline tax is therefore a permanent thing thing.

But what hold does the income tax have on the people? It is merely a current revenue measure, enacted today, subject to repeal tomorrow.

The unfortunate aspect of this bond proposal is that if pushed to its logical conclusion it will frighten the voters out of fifty years of progress. As a current revenue measure for the schools, the state hospital and other public institutions, the income tax is perfectly proper—and this newspaper supports it. But as the basis of a new bond issue it is unstable and dangerous.

Why, with all the additional revenue that the income tax will bring to the state, can't the administration build the state hospital out of current appropriations?

That is a question the people of Arkansas are entitled to hear answered.

"Cow Minded"

WE are told that we are going to get somewhere in the farm dairy business when we become "Cow Minded." We believe that is true. But just what does the expression mean? It may be illustrated in this way: We as a people are today "Automobile Minded." Practically all of our own cars, even though we may own nothing else. We think we have to have them, and perhaps we do. We do not care to argue that point, not that it would make any difference. When we get the urge in the same degree to own a cow, and then a better cow, a later model, if you please, then, we will get cows. Since a cow does not cost but the mere fraction as much as a cheap automobile, we will get quite a few cows. Since cows increase and automobiles wear out our cow population will be self-perpetuating. Since they are producers and not consumers in the sense that an automobile is, they at once become a source of profit and a mighty factor in a new and a permanent prosperity. How may we develop this condition of "cow mindedness?" When once developed it will stay with us and grow just like the "cotton minded" idea has stayed with us.—Little Rover (Ashdown) News.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By Rodney Dutcher

WASHINGTON—The drinking wets of prohibition America are getting onto a home brew-moonshine basis nearly everywhere.

The average drinker, if he is not consuming home-brewed beer or domestic wine, is nearly always drinking whiskey or gin or beer in which the kick is produced by alcohol from an illicit still.

For some time his chances of getting the "real stuff" have been down to what seems to be a minimum.

These facts one gathers from authorities in the Prohibition Bureau.

At one time a tremendous amount of industrial alcohol was diverted into the bootlegging business. A great deal of this alcohol still finds its way into the national drink supply but not nearly so much. The government has tightened up in its supervision over industrial alcohol and it has become harder to get.

The Stills Are Busy

But the smaller the flow of industrial alcohol into the bootleg channels the greater the production of alcohol from moonshine stills. And the moonshine alcohol is, as prohibition enforcers admit, pure grain alcohol. It does not contain the horrible and more or less poisonous concoctions which the government has been putting into industrial alcohol in order to keep it out of cocktail and highball glasses. And the consumer does not have to worry about the bootlegger's expertise in the process of recocking.

The great proportion of booze seized in the country as a whole, according to government chemists, is moonshine liquor made in stills from corn sugar molasses and grains.

Only about five per cent of the seized liquor is found to contain what was once diverted industrial alcohol. In some locations, of course, especially in large eastern states where industrial alcohol is more readily available the percentage is considerably higher.

Throughout the south, the middle west and the mountain states virtually all the whiskey and all the alcohol found appears to have come straight from the still. The best market for straight alcohol is found in the states where the law is most nearly enforced, owing to the greater convenience of carrying alcohol. In comparatively dry Iowa and Kansas, alcohol is used by the ultimate consumer to "spike" near-beer.

The chemists are not surprised to observe what appears to be the generally increased popularity of gin, for they explain that gin is much easier to make than whiskey, if the maker only has the alcohol.

"As the supervision of alcohol becomes more effective and as our treatment of it becomes more difficult to overcome," a prohibition official told your correspondent, "the illicit alcohol and whiskey stills will do a correspondingly larger business. Of course, these are much harder to control. When we get down to a moonshine proposition it is up to the local authorities to help suppress the traffic. The federal force simply can't be expected to locate all the concealed stills."

Dear Friends:

Busy! Why we American men are usually half a minute ahead of the clock! And then some—with this hurly-burly we call business. So, quite naturally, the best of us are apt, now and again, to tell lies about us.

You know the sort of things. A soiled lapel—a dusty collar, that leaves a pale gray streak on our linen—or an oil stain from the car, that perhaps, we never noticed. The easiest and best way to have your clothes represent you, properly, is to call Benzine (385), and wish the responsibility off onto Hall-Moses—then forget it. They will call for your apparel at regular intervals—clean them with thoroughness—fluff them into fresh, crisp newness—and send them back fit for a gentleman to wear—ready to tell the truth about you to the whole, wide world.

THIS HAS HAPPENED

Helen Page feels hopelessly in love with her guardian, Leonard Brent. A chance meeting with a dyes beggar, Charles Nellis, causes Brent to change his plans for Helen's future. Soon after he tells her that she is the only grandchild of a millionaire, Cyril K. Cunningham, Brent takes her to Cunningham and offers proofs which the lonely old man accepts. Hoping to make up for the injustice done her mother, Cunningham sows the girl with affection and gifts.

Among Helen's new friends are Eva Ennis and her brother Robert, who falls in love with her. Brent finds another lock like the one he had taken from Nellis to prove Helen as the heiress. He also becomes jealous of Bob and plots to secure Helen for himself quickly. Hearing the doctor say that a sudden shock would kill the old man, Brent gets the servants out of the way and rushes into the sick room shouting wildly that Helen has been killed. His plan works and when the attendant returns, Cunningham is dead. Then Brent appears as friend and former guardian of Helen and takes charge of arrangements.

Brent tries to break off a love affair with Eva without arousing Helen's suspicions. Meanwhile, a chance meeting between Helen and Bob reveals their love for each other, but she tells him she has promised herself to another. Next day Helen goes to New York to ask Brent to release her and finds Carmel Segro there acting very much at home. When Brent returns, Carmel throws herself into his arms before he sees Helen. This makes it easier for Helen to demand that their engagement be broken, but Brent refuses to release her, saying that he had given up marriage earlier and devoted his life to her so that now she has no right to reject him as he has devoted his life to her, and that Carmel means nothing to him. When his arguments fail to hold her, Brent resolves on more drastic methods.

Meanwhile, Shallimar Morris, a school friend of Helen's, arrives for a visit and meets Bob.

CHAPTER XXXIV

"But you haven't been doing it long," Shallimar vouched, "since of you won't murder me for being so unoriginal—all work and no play and all that y' know."

"Practically all my life," Bob told her ignoring the comment. Shallimar was not yet stopped. "My, how exceedingly difficult it must be to dim your light," she came back without pause. "I envy you, boy. I can't do without a little play. Know any playgrounds?"

Bob looked around at Helen, and was about to ask what was wrong with Bramblewood when he remembered Helen's recent bereavement. At least he was old-fashioned enough to consider it recent and to respect Helen for not forgetting it in what might have been, had she wished a continuous round of pleasures.

"How should I know—when I don't play?" he evaded. "We might, if we could drop Helen at home and borrow her car, find a few—anyway one," Shallimar replied, delighting in Bob's growing embarrassment and his attempt to sidestep her.

Eva barely suppressed a gasp but Helen managed a laugh. "Why of course, I'll be glad to let you take the car, since I can't go with you," she said adding to herself: "If he takes her out in my car I'll never speak to him again!"

It must be a favorite sport of the gods to set people at cross purposes, especially people who love each other. Such people take all trifles that touch upon their relations with one another with a seriousness that often spells the doom of their happiness. This was such an instance.

"So you don't care," Bob thought. "Bob has a car of his own," Eva said snappishly.

"I couldn't ask Miss Morris to ride in that," Bob said with far more disdain for his lovely possession than he felt.

Helen flushed, remembering the ride they'd had in that same car just the night before. He had seemed to think it good enough for her. And it had been a lovely ride.

"Well, come along. I've something to do at Bramblewood," she said. "See you tomorrow Eva?"

Eva turned her head away. Sharply it might have seemed had anyone been tranquil enough to notice. "Not tomorrow, Helen," she answered evasively; "unless you want me to run in after dinner. I'm going down to New York."

"Again?"

It was Bob who asked and his face had sobered considerably.

Eva's answer was uneasy. "Yes," she said, "I . . . I . . . you know I should have a lesson every day." Her voice, too high and too false, for the mere answering of a simple query, further troubled her brother.

But he did not say anything more to her, for at that moment their mother came into the living room. Helen went over and kissed her, an act at which Shallimar stared in amazement. Helen, who had never been demonstrative or . . . well! Shallimar wanted to laugh on a sudden thought but there was no excuse for visible mirth at the moment.

"That's a line," she commented to herself. "Sorry, old dear," flinging a mental challenge to Helen. "See why little Eva. Well she keeps her men who holds them. Mother stuff! Shallimar never snored, but she came close to it at that moment. "She must think the kid has a mother complex. Well something different on my hook, baby lamb. Something hotter."

It did not even occur to her that Helen was indulging a starved desire for mother love. Neither did it occur to her that there was any reason why she should not want a man that Helen was interested in. To Shallimar each person was an individual. The strings that a man might attach to himself were for him to consider, not for her to concern herself with. She left a right to have whatever she could take.

Why look at a man as anything but a free agent? It wasn't fair to the man. Why say to him: "You poor devil, remember your shackles?" Why not help him to forget them, so long as all the world knows that a man cannot be made to forget that which fills his heart?

It wasn't honor it wasn't responsibility, it wasn't anything but love that had made the man she wanted marry the other girl, Shallimar knew.

What she had resented was his suggestion that she could keep on trying to make him fall in love with her, regardless of his marriage. She was furious because she had failed. Had she met him after his marriage it would not have hindered her hunting, but her pride was wounded and she vowed she was through with him.

Bob, however, was new game. "Won't you all say for coffee and a bite to eat?" Mrs Ennis invited.

"Bob and I have a date," Shallimar declined, purposely using his shortened name to give them all a bump.

Mrs. Ennis looked questioningly at her son. He avoided her eyes. "Good night," Eva said abruptly and edged out of the room. She did not want to talk with her mother tonight. There was that unfinished scene of the afternoon, following upon her return from the city. She did not care to renew it.

"What is the matter with you, Eva?" She dreaded those words. As though one could not claim the right to hide pain, let it show in the eyes ever so much.

"They shouldn't nag me! They ought to let me alone!" she wailed into her pillow after her mother had knocked on her locked door and, waiting in vain for admittance had given up and gone on to her own room, her heart heavy with dread.

Eva too was unhappily abed, dinner dress forgotten, the high heels of her slippers digging painfully into the lace counterpane.

Only Shallimar appeared to be having a good time. She sat beside Bob and flirted like mad. But she couldn't get very far in the car because Bob could not see her and her strength lay in her looks.

She tried other things, but he did not respond. When she leaned on him he leaned away. When she asked if he could drive with one hand he said no.

Shallimar was not coy and Bob was not complex. Which made it all the more dangerous for him had he but known it. For coyness is never subtle, and from subtlety he simple person cannot escape unless he is too simple to get caught in it.

"You must know of some place where we can dance," Shallimar said in a way that would have made Bob feel like a boy scout to deny it.

"Are you particular?" he asked, thinking of a roadhouse a few miles ahead of them. There was another one beyond it, but checks were paid there with hundred-dollar bills. Bob smiled to think of himself passing out hundred-dollar bills to a waiter.

"I think I've heard that Montoya Malone is hereabouts making whoopees," Shallimar said. "I like her stuff, if that's an answer."

"Not for me," Bob promptly replied; "I've got to win a few law suits first."

"I'll give you my first divorce," Shallimar promised. "I'm not so lousy—don't you love that old?—with money myself. Got to collect a few alimony checks."

"I'm not going in for divorce cases," Bob said disapprovingly. Shallimar laughed. "Well, it's not your future that interests me so much, dear one, as the feeling I have that you're a marvelous dancer. Come on."

"This is a cheap place," Bob warned her when they drove up to their destination. "No mind. I won't see anything but you."

Bob was not taking her at all seriously. But a little later, when she was cradled against him on the dance floor he could not take her lightly. She was an entrancing creature, alluring with a nameless promise.

He had no desire to find out what it was, but it pleased him, since it had fallen to his lot to take a girl out just to spite Helen—at least he hoped it would spite her—that she should be attractive. It made it easier.

For it wasn't a pleasant thing to be doing. Childish, he told himself. But what the devil? Helen, with her quirky ideas might get a noble reaction out of it and hope he would fall sincerely in love with her friend.

What about this girl he was dancing with? Couldn't he learn to love her? He was too wise to think she'd fallen very hard for him simply because she'd flirted with him. But what if he tried to make her be serious? It would be a release from his maddening ache for Helen if he could start something with Shallimar. Why couldn't it be done. But he'd play clean.

"What's that funny name Helen calls you?" he said bending his head closer to her ear.

"It's a beautiful name. Shallimar."

"Shallimar," Bob repeated it, but he was thinking: "Why did Helen come over tonight? Fool! To bring Eva home, of course. Probably didn't expect to meet me. And maybe she didn't care . . ."

... didn't belittle her . . . you know she cares, but she's quitting. She couldn't quit if she cared enough . . . she'd see what a rotten deal she's handing everybody and the fellow included. Well, here's where I find out if I'm chained hand and foot to a hopeless passion."

Their dance was at an end. When they were seated at their table again he said with a directness that started Shallimar, and that was by no means an easy thing to do:

"I'd like to fall in love with you."

Then he paused.

"And?" Shallimar invited. "I don't think you're worth it with your easy talk of divorce and alimony, but I don't think it ever would come to marriage. I'm too poor for that."

Shallimar's face suddenly became a blank. She sat back and stared at him.

Chancery Court in Session
Circuit court recessed at noon yesterday in order to visit the jail and other county property in connection with the grand jury's usual report on the condition of public property.

During the recess a session of Hempstead county chancery court was held by Chancellor C. E. Johnson in which the principal case was that of Eric Prince Howard against W. J. Arnold et al. Mrs. Howard was suing on an alleged settlement of her interest in the Prince estate. Attorneys E. F. McFadden and Luke Monroe represented the plaintiff, with Attorneys O. A. Graves and U. A. Gentry for the defense.

Proceedings in Civil circuit court for the last two days have been moving steadily but slowly. Of interest in school circles was the dismissal of an appeal in Columbus Special School District (E. E. Ames et al) versus Rural Special School District No. 19 (T. F. Hicks et al) from an order of the County Board of Education.

Other dispositions in civil court were as follows:

Tuesday

Oler Parker vs. L. J. N. Kellher Construction company: Dismissed with prejudice at cost of plaintiff.

L. M. Boswell vs. City of Hope: Dismissed with prejudice at cost of plaintiff.

J. H. Kent vs. Alvin Wisner et al: Transferred to equity.

members of the "entrenched criminal ring" which Governor Moody ordered smashed when he declared martial law in Borger. No announcement was made to indicate why decision was reserved in two of the cases, those of Clint Millhollon, who is critically ill, and Mrs. G. Louis Grim who is in poor health. The prisoners who were denied writs of habeas corpus were: Louis Grim, John Ware, Ethel Ware, Don McComb and Sam Jones.

Attorneys for the applicants insisted that action of Brig. General Walters, commandant at Borger, in holding the prisoners without bond was in violation of the bill of rights and the Texas constitution. Attorneys for the state argued that the prisoners, if released, would return immediately to their old pursuits and nullify any advances the military might have made in cleaning up the town.

GUT OVER HER NERVOUS SPELLS

Indiana Lady Says She Felt Stronger After She Had Taken Cardui.

Madison, Ind.—"When I was a young girl, I was run-down and in bad health," writes Mrs. W. H. Quinn, of 117 West Third Street, this city. "I was delicate, thin and pale. I was nervous, at times."

"My mother knew of Cardui and thought it would be a good tonic for me to take. I took three bottles and my health improved a great deal.

"The nervous spells stopped and I gained in strength and weight. My mother was pleased with my improvement. I kept on taking Cardui for awhile. I have been in good health ever since."

Cardui has been in use so long that its real worth is known by several generations of women. Many women report that they began taking Cardui on their mothers' advice.

The medicinal value of the herbs from which Cardui is extracted has been well-known in the history of medicine for over 600 years. Try Cardui in your case.

Stacy Shows Class In Taking Malone In Thursday's Night Bout

In First Appearance In Rink Here Winner Demonstrates It Will Take a Mighty Good Man To Steps With Him the Limit

Jack Stacy stepped out last night and demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of Hope fans that he is as good a boxer as his manager says he is—and that's saying a lot for any fighter! He took Malone, who was on for a scheduled ten-round bout, to a thorough cleaning in four rounds, a large part of that time Malone reclining on the canvas.

The end came in the fourth—and it was not unexpected. Malone had been down several times, always scrambling to his feet and charging in again. But the last time he couldn't make it. Hand it to Malone for one thing: He is not the boxer Stacy is but he's as game as they make 'em. Fairly clever, too, but this Stacy lad is in a class by himself around these diggins and if Promoter Leavelle gets some boy here to take Stacy's measure he'll have introduced to Hope sport lovers a chap scheduled to climb a far ways up the fistic ladder.

Two of Leavelle's contenders, named on the card, ran out on him.

Admits Choking Girl to Death

After the lifeless body of his murdered sweetheart had lain in his hotel room 36 hours, Dexter Dayton, 25-year-old Kansas City insurance salesman, awakened called police and confessed that he had choked to death Marjorie O'Donnell, a magazine writer of Oil City, Pa. The crime took place in a hotel at Washington, D. C. and is said to have followed a quarrel. At the left is a closeup of Dayton, right, he is shown entering a patrol wagon after his arrest.

BEWARE THE COUGH FROM COLDS THAT HANG ON

Coughs from colds may lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth. Of all known drugs creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for coughs from colds and bronchial irritations. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs. Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of coughs from colds, bronchitis and minor forms of bronchial irritations, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (adv.)

Heavy Blankets the Fashion at Second World Series Game

The weather was ideal for football when the Cubs and Athletics took the field for the second world series. From the grandstand, the two dugouts appeared to be a mass of blankets. This NEA picture shows Connie Mack, with his two star pitchers wrapped in blankets. Lefty Grove, who came to Earnshaw's rescue when the Cubs began to hit him rather freely, is shown at the left and Earnshaw is at the right.

Young Foxx the "Babe Ruth" of the 1929 Series

Jimmy Foxx, youthful first baseman of the Athletics, is causing baseball fans to forget that Babe Ruth is not in the world series this year. Foxx clouted his second home run of the series in the third inning of the second game, scoring Cochrane and Simmons ahead of him. His homer seemed to be the punch that broke down the Cubs' defense, for after that the Athletics proceeded to pile up nine runs. This NEA picture shows Foxx crossing the plate with Simmons, Cochrane and Bing Miller waiting to congratulate him.

Rival Chiefs—A Study

The Chicago judge who said that a man who would hide behind a woman's skirts must be a worm was right as to dimensions anyway.

Sidney Weil, new fan-owner of the Cincinnati Reds faces as his first job the selection of a manager. In this connection the Cincinnati Post has been conducting a poll of fans' choices for the job, and this table of results is from early returns:

CANDIDATE	VOTES
Edd Roush	128
Larry Kopf	103
Earl Neale	95
Donie Bush	87
Bubbles Hargrave	74
Clarence Rowland	15
Eppa Rixey	6
Frank Frisch	6
Ivy Wingo	5
Walter Pipp	5
Tris Speaker	4
Dan Howley	4
Jack Hendricks	3

Two each: George Kelly, Bobby Wallace, Charley Dresen, Hughie Critz, Curtis Walker.

One each: Max Carey, Honus Wagner, Rogers Hornsby, Red Lucas, Rube Bressler, Marty Berghammer, Wade Killefer, Bill McKechnie, Henie Groh, Adolfo Luque, Gabby Hartnett, Grover Land, Casey Stengel, Rabbit Maranville, Dutch Zwilling, John McGraw and Ira Thomas.

You will note from the above that Jack Hendricks, former manager, still has a couple of friends in Cincinnati. Judging from the coals of criticism heaped upon Jack's head, we hadn't thought this possible.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

Jack Sharkey was known as "Big Skee" in the Navy—His first fight was impromptu and found Jack in the heroic role of avenging a boy selling ice cream after sailors had robbed him of his wares—One of the tough tars took Jack on for a bloody draw—"Biff" Crawley, now promoting fights at Mobile, holds the only decision over Jack while in the Navy—Sidney Weil, new owner of the Reds, has a brother who is an undertaker—Some umpire business?—Pop flies are the one weakness in Hornsby's armor—When he was playing third base for St. Louis he muffed plenty of them—And was switched to second "because he couldn't be any worse there than at third"—Pat Malone's father is Christ Malone, night yardmaster in the railroad yards at Altoona, Pa.

A Chilly Series

The world series is at hand again, which means that it's time to take down the old ulster and prepare to shiver it through. The owners seem agreed that October is late for the series, but year after year the schedule contains the same number of 154 games.

After the pennants have been cinched in both leagues, very little interest remains in baseball. Several scribes propose that the old 154-game schedule be followed next year, but that the season automatically close when the pennants have been cinched. This would result in complications for clubs in fighting out their first division berths, of course, but would be as fair for one as for the other, with every team acquainted with the rule. President Barnard of the American League has gone on record as favoring a shorter season, to end, say about the last of September. It is our opinion that world series and all should be over and done with by the last of September.

Loughran Coming Back!

Tommy Loughran is to take another whirl at the heavyweight racket on November 22, we learn from New York, one of the lesser heavyweights to be his opponent. Perhaps Tommy was a little hasty in his invasion of heavyweight ranks when he took on Sharkey, who is the best in the business sometimes. Loughran has proved by his gameness that he is deserving of another chance. The transition from light-heavy to heavy is a step that should be taken carefully.
